CIVIL ACTION

NO. _____

COMPLAINT

1. The plaintiff brings this action to redress violations by the defendants of her rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States and the State of Connecticut. Late at night, without a warrant and without any cause, excuse or justification, the defendants broke into the plaintiff's home, conducted a brief search which awakened and terrified the plaintiff and her family, and then departed having made no arrests and having seized no property.

2. The plaintiff brings this action to redress the deprivation under color of statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage of a right, privilege and immunity secured to the plaintiff by the Fourth, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States (R. S. 1879, 42 U. S. C. §1983), and arising under the law and statutes of the State of Connecticut.

3. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. §1343 (3), this being an action authorized by law to redress the deprivation under color of law, statute, ordinance, regulation, custom and usage of a right, privilege and immunity secured to the plaintiff by the Fourth, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

4. During all times mentioned in this complaint, the plaintiff was, and she still is, a citizen of the United States, and she resided, and now resides, in the City of New Haven, State of Connecticut. She is of full age.

5. At all times mentioned herein the defendants were duly appointed and presently acting police officers in the Police Department of the City of New Haven.

6. At all times material to this complaint, the defendants were employed as police officers of the City of New Haven, State of Connecticut, and were acting under the color of their official capacity and their acts were performed under color of the statutes and ordinances of the City of New Haven and of the State of Connecticut.

7. During all times mentioned herein, the defendants and each of them, separately and in concert, acted under color and pretense of law, to wit, under color of the statutes, ordinances, regulations, customs and usages of the State of Connecticut and the County of New Haven and the City of New Haven. Each of the defendants here, separately and in concert, engaged in the illegal conduct herein mentioned to the injury of the plaintiff and deprived the plaintiff of the rights, privileges and immunities secured to the plaintiff by the Fourth, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the United States and the State of Connecticut.

8. At approximately 4:30 A. M. on July 7, 1971, the plaintiff and her family were asleep at their home at 671 Winchester Avenue in the City of New Haven, State of Connecticut. Suddenly, without warning and without announcing their presence or identity in any way, the defendants and other persons whose identity is unknown to the plaintiff broke down the rear door to the plaintiff's said home and entered the premises. The defendants and their companions, all of whom were unknown to the plaintiff, were not in uniform and did not identify themselves in any way. With drawn guns, the defendants and their said companions searched the plaintiff's home while directing at the plaintiff and her family, a stream of vile and abusive language. Defendants and their said companions thereupon left plaintiff's home, having made no arrests and having seized no property.

9. All of the events described in paragraph eight were conducted without the authority of a warrant and were utterly without justification or excuse in fact or in law.

10. Each of the defendants, separately and in concert, acted outside the scope of his jurisdiction and without authorization of law and each of the defendants, separately and in concert, acted wilfully, knowingly and purposefully with the specific intent to deprive the plaintiff of her right to:

- A. Freedom from illegal search and seizure of her person, home, papers and effects;
- B. Freedom from illegal detention and imprisonment;
- C. Freedom from physical abuse, coercion and intimidation.

All of these rights are secured to the plaintiff by the provisions of the Fourth Amendment and the due process clause of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and by Title 42, United States Code, Section 1983, and by Title 18, United States Code, Section 245 (1968), and by the statutes and laws of the State of Connecticut.

11. As a result of all the foregoing acts committed against her by the defendants, and each of them, plaintiff sustained injury to and loss of her real and personal property and effects, pain and suffering, degradation, humiliation, embarrassment and fear. As a result of the said acts the plaintiff has feared, and continues to fear, a repetition of the said acts of the defendants and as a result has suffered and continues to suffer anxiety and mental and emotional distress.

WHEREFORE plaintiff demands judgment against the defendants and each of them, jointly and severally, in the amount of TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($25,000.00) and she further demands punitive damages against the defendants, and each of them, jointly and severally, in the amount of FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS ($50,000.00), plus the costs of this action; and she further demands such other relief as to this Court seems just, proper and equitable.

Civil No. 14908

May 16, 1974
New Haven, Connecticut

B E F O R E :

JON O. NEWMAN, U.S.D.J.

A P P E A R A N C E S :FOR THE PLAINTIFF:

JOHN R. WILLIAMS, ESQUIRE

New Haven, Connecticut

FOR THE DEFENDANTS:

ROGER FRECHETTE, ESQUIRE
Corporation Counsel

New Haven, Connecticut

GEORGE EASTMAN, ESQUIRE

New Haven, Connecticut

2 MR. WILLIAMS: I going to be quite brief,
3 if your Honor please, because obviously your Honor
4 has read the Dorman case as well as the rest of us
5 have and has read Jones.

6 I think that there are a number of dis-
7 tinctions between the situation existing in Dorman
8 and the situation existing here and those distinctions 9 are not only the absence of the gun and not only the 10 fact that there was a violent crime involved and -- 11 incidentally, it is important to note that it was a 12 crime in which there had been actual, and from reading 13 the facts, utterly uncalled for, unnecessary violence 14 and abuse directed towards the victim of the crime in 15 the Dorman case, whereas none of that is present here.

16 In addition, there was the fifth point 17 which the Court knows, and that is the likelihood of 18 escape. If there is not a swift apprehension there is 19 no suggestion that that was so here. Indeed, the 20 suggestion was they were subsequently going to go to 21 another place in the City of New Haven for the purpose 22 of cutting the drugs and then presumably be returning 23 home at the conclusion of that.

24 There was no suggestion they were about 25 to make an escape, whereas in the Dorman case there was

2 reason to believe Dorman would discover shortly that 3 he had betrayed his identity, whereas with regards to 4 the Jones brothers it's just exactly the opposite.
5 According to the detective, they had reason to believe 6 they had been conducting this kind of business as a 7 regular matter for a long time.

8 And, of course, we have the problem of 9 its existence at night. That obviously was present 10 in Dorman as well but the distinction there is that the 11 entry in the Dorman case, as the Court says, was though 12 not voluntarily peaceful. That is, the woman in the 13 house opened the door and admitted them. That situation 14 obviously is not present here and indeed the manner in 15 which the officers entered, the speed with which they 16 entered, made it impossible for someone to come to the 17 door to meet them even under their version of the events

18 THE COURT: Let me ask you your view.
19 This case Bristles with legal issues on which there is 20 scant guidance, unhappily.

21 The Dorman Court, as I read it, seems to 22 aggregate all of the circumstances surrounding the 23 entry in determining whether the Fourth Amendment was 24 violated. There are many cases, as you know -- you 25 cited some of them to me, which focus on the method of entry as being a circumstance which is beyond the pale, so to speak, in and of itself taints an entry, wholly apart from whether there was probably cause or reasonableness to affect the entry at all.

I am inclined to think the separation ought to be made. The Bivens case in our Circuit seemed to make it. The Court talked about the officers responsible belief in the validity of the search and of the manner of making it, which implies to me these are two separate aspects.

Now, I just raise it to you to inquire what your view is.

MR. WILLIAMS: I think they are clearly-- first of all, Dorman didn't raise that problem because it wasn't present in the Dorman case and in aggregating the factors which they did aggregate, all of the factors that they brought together had to do with the reasonableness of making the entry without the warrant, but the cases on essentially the knock and announce case, if you will, are the same whether there is or is not a warrant, and in some of the knock and announce cases there is a warrant and some there is not a warrant, and all of those cases have treated that as a separate issue.

2 Indeed, the earliest cases in this country
3 on that subject which did arise in Connecticut, if 4 memory serves, were cases where there was a warrant.
5 It seems to me a damage action against a bonds person, 6 who it was described as a bail, in the decision, what-7 ever that may mean, involves someone who had, if I
8 remember correctly, an order of some kind directing him 9 to make the apprehension but it was a situation where 10 he broke in without going through the adequate pro-11 cedures.

12 It seems to me that case has been cited in 13 some of the Connecticut decisions that I have referred 14 your Honor to. So I do think that it is a completely 15 separate issue. I think that obviously we are entitled 16 to prevail with respect to both of those issues on the 17 law.

18 I don't think I need to say anything to 19 your Honor on damages because your Honor has hit the 20 point which has been made by a myraid of cases such as 21 Basista vs Weir, Sullivan against Little Hunting Park
22 and all of the others, that a violation of federal con-23 stitutional right results in damages of some kind and 24 it's only a question of how much damages.

25 THE COURT: What about Mr. Frechette's

2 point that the lost wages are not appropriate as con-
3 sequential damages -- actually, it's not lost wages.
4 I don't think there was testimony that wages were lost.

5 MR. FRECHETTE: She said she didn't work
6 for three days and she got three something an hour.

7 THE COURT: I don't think she said
8 she didn't draw her pay.

9 MR. FRECHETTE: That doesn't make her
10 different -- I'm not claiming collateral as a defense 11 to this.

12 THE COURT: I thought that the burden
13 of the testimony was not that she was out dollars but 14 that the distress of the situation simply caused her 15 the upset and the inconvenience that necessitated 16 staying home and it was the distress that was being 17 alleged in the dollars.

18 MR. WILLIAMS: That is correct. There 19 wasn't testimony on it but the trump is that what she 20 did was take days off that she had coming so she was 21 compensated for those days.

22 THE COURT: You are not claiming that 23 dollars represented by those hours, it's simply an 24 indicia of the distress?

25 MR. WILLIAMS: Yes.

2 MR. FRECHETTE: Your Honor overruled me
3 that there was no expert testimony to bring that to 4 bear, so I claim that's not properly before you.

5 THE COURT: I don't think that is such 6 a technical medical aspect.

7 MR. FRECHETTE: I realize that your Honor
8 has ruled against me.

9 May I answer two questions that were 10 raised in your comments with Mr. Williams.

11 MR. WILLIAMS: I wasn't quite through.
12 The only other point I was going to make was in 13 response to Mr. Frechette's attempt to analogize this 14 action to a State Court action. The analogy he neglected 15 to draw was the trespass situation on which we are all 16 aware always results in some damage.

17 It goes without saying, even if you draw 18 a state analogy you have damages and it's only a 19 question --

20 THE COURT: What about another very 21 troublesome part of this case, which is the appropriate 22 standand for the trier, for the jury if it's a jury
23 case or for me if the burden of Mr. Frechette's argument 24 is that the case is so clear that it need not be sub-25 mitted to the trier under normal court-jury division, and your point has been that there is no good faith defense here?

MR. WILLIAMS: That's correct.

THE COURT: Indeed there is not even a probable cause defense. You come at that apparently from trespass cases?

MR. WILLIAMS: Yes.

THE COURT: I am very skeptical of that argument because it seems to me that the law of trespass, while it does deny the citizen trespasser a good defense, that he stumbled on to somebody -- he is a trespasser even though he thought it was his own home.

But a police officer, who has probable cause to make an arrest and reasonable grounds to think a person is on a certain property, as I understand it is not a trespasser if he goes onto that property to make the arrest.

MR. WILLIAMS: My understanding, your Honor, is that on those facts without more, he is not a trespasser if he is correct. If he finds the person there. But that if the person isn't there, if he is mistaken, then he is a trespasser so he enters at his peril.

there is probable cause in Dorman but would he think

THE COURT: I don't think that is the way that Harper and James treatise views it. If Connecticut has a special law --

MR. WILLIAMS: No, Connecticut doesn't.

THE COURT: I don't think so.

MR. WILLIAMS: It's my understanding, your Honor, is that if the offense for which the person was being sought was one which posed immediate danger, that would be a different kind of situation. In the restatement there is an example cited of a person who has probable cause to believe that a person inside the house is attempting then and there to commit the crime of murder and it turns out he was mistaken, a police officer, and the restatement says under those circumstances the entry is proper, it's not a trespass, but I think that the distinction that is drawn there is that there is that immediate threat because elsewhere the restatement states that with regard to any privilege of entry, if it turns out that the person entering under a reasonable believe that he was so privileged is wrong, then he is a trespasser.

I think there is another distinction which--

THE COURT: That is not said with police officers -- that is just said in the general

1 MR. FRECHETTE: Fair enough. Thank you.
2 context of a citizen who thinks he has the right to be 3 on the property and it turns out he is wrong.

4 MR. WILLIAMS: The restatement offers no
5 examples on that point with regard to policemen. It 6 does offer the example of a sheriff executing a writ
7 and suggests that there if he makes a reasonable mistake
8 he is a trespasser. In that particular --

9 THE COURT: I think on that point I 10 am prepared -- what I understand to be the Harper and 11 James statement of common law, that the police officer, 12 if he has probable cause to arrest and reasonable 13 grounds to believe the person to be arrested is on the 14 property, then he is not a trespasser.

15 Now, what the standard is by which the 16 reasonableness of his conduct should be judged is 17 another question but at least I don't think it takes 18 out of the case whatever defense it is that the Bivens 19 case has put into it and that is another troublesome 20 problem.

21 Frankly, I had thought from Pierson that 22 the only issue was whether the constitutional violation 23 had been committed that is to say, whether there has 24 been an invasion of the Fourth Amendment right, and I
25 think that's what the Pierson case says. It uses good

2 faith in another context as to the officer's responsible 3 belief that a lawyer later declared unconstitutional
4 was valid at the time he acted, and the case you cited 5 from the Seventh Circuit, I think your Brief says the 6 Fifth Circuit but I know the case you mean --

7 MR. WILLIAMS: It is Joseph against 8 Rowlen.

9 THE COURT: The Seventh Circuit makes 10 that point very clear, that the good faith defense is 11 something quite apart from the probable cause defense 12 and is not a second line of defense, as it were. The 13 Bivens case in this Circuit, it seems to me, is quite 14 different and there both the majority and the concurring 15 opinions say that there are two lines of defense, and 16 they distinguish the constitutional standard and what 17 Judge Lumbard calls the less stringent standard, which 18 is a defense to a police officer's liability.

19 Now, I am troubled by that but I think I 20 am obliged to follow it.

21 MR. WILLIAMS: If it please the Court,
22 I do think that Bivens is not applicable straight across 23 the board to an action under 1983 against State Police 24 Officers.

25 THE COURT: I think it is. The Court

2 says what they are doing there is applying the same
3 standard that would be so in a 1983 action. I suspect 4 what you're really saying is that he ought not to have 5 come to that conclusion.

6 MR. WILLIAMS: It is dictum --

7 THE COURT: It is dictum but it
8 couldn't be a clearer expression viewed and I really 9 don't think I can disregard it.

10 MR. WILLIAMS: I certainly can understand
11 the problem that the Court presents. I can only say 12 that I think that the law is not that way. I think 13 that the law is that there are two lines. I think that 14 follows certainly from your Honor's decision in the 15 Thamel against East Hartford.

16 THE COURT: Thamel, of course, involved
17 a misdemeanor and the common law there is so different 18 from the law of felonies that I just think that it's 19 all right to stay with Pierson for the common law when 20 you're dealing with an area where the common law makes 21 a distinct difference.

22 Once you are in the area of a felony arrest
23 and searches to apprehend suspected felons, then it 24 seems to me the Bivens case tells me what standard I 25 am to apply.

2 MR. WILLIAMS: I can't argue the Bivens
3 case has been distinguished and been distinguished by 4 the Second Circuit -- I do think, however, --

5 THE COURT: I will observe that when 6 Judge Lumbard came to apply an aspect of the ruling in 7 Arroyo, he didn't draw the same distinction. That was 8 excessive force. He just said there was excessive 9 force. He didn't say to himself the question was, a, 10 is there excessive force and, b, did it offer reasonable 11 belief he was using only necessary force, so the state 12 of the law is very unclear on this but I am afraid that 13 the last word of the Court of Appeals is what I have 14 to follow.

15 THE COURT: Now, I am also not at all 16 certain that I was right yesterday in acceding to the 17 view of both sides that the probable cause question is 18 for the Court and I'm even less sure of it today 19 because now there is a conflict in the testimony that 20 bears on probable cause.

21 If the facts were totally undisputed that's 22 one thing but now there is a sharp conflict in testimony 23 of whether the officers inquired once they were in the 24 house and there is some conflict as to whether they 25 gave notice before.

2 I can appreciate what the defendant's
3 agrument is going to be, that the young lady didn't 4 hear them because she was on the phone, but I think 5 it is a fair issue for the trier of the facts as to 6 whether they didn't hear them or they didn't announce 7 their presence and particularly since there is such a 8 conflict as to what was said inside, any jury, any 9 fact finder that disbelieves the officer on what he 10 said inside is certainly entitled to disbelieve him on 11 what he claims he said outside, so I think those are 12 all fair issues for a trier and under those circumstances, 13 although I am going to run the risk, if not the certainty,
14 of confusing the jury I think I have to give them a 15 very elaborate reasoning process to go through.

16 I think I have to first tell them the 17 factors that bear on probable cause and then I have to 18 explain to them that even if there is not probable 19 cause or both to arrest, to go in to arrest on the 20 manner of entry, all those three elements, even if there 21 is not probable cause the officers have a defense if 22 they have the subjective good faith to believe that 23 what they were doing was valid and if objectively that 24 was a reasonable belief. I think that is what the 25 Bivens court wants me to do.

2 MR. FRECHETTE: May I be heard on that.

3 THE COURT: This may be one of those 4 situations where it's easier to spin out the standards
5 in appellant opinions than to give jury charges but I 6 think that is what I am faced with.

7 MR. FRECHETTE: If your Honor is, as your 8 Honor says, going along with Bivens then you are right 9 back where you were yesterday, I respectfully submit, 10 because there is no testimony from anyone that they 11 did anything but act at the tip of an informer and we 12 went through all of that.

13 THE COURT: I understand that but I
14 don't think --

15 MR. FRECHETTE: Even if you disbelieve
16 your first test on the reasonableness, there is no
17 question on probable cause from anybody.

18 THE COURT: You mean probable cause
19 to arrest the Jones brothers?

20 MR. FRECHETTE: That's right, and to enter 21 the house.

22 THE COURT: No. I think there is a
23 fair issue as to whether there is probable cause to 24 enter the house. Now, if I had to rule on it as the 25 trier it would be a very close question in my mind. I

2 indicated yesterday I thought there was probable cause 3 because I was not considering it as a search. I was 4 considering it only as an arrest and I was also dis-
5 regarding the night factor.

6 I am satisfied that I was wrong in dis-7 regarding those two factors, that the entry ought to 8 be viewed as a search to arrest somebody.

9 The question is, is it a reasonable thing
10 to have done. If I had to rule on that I would be 11 very troubled by it and I am not at all sure I would 12 come out the same way I indicated yesterday but what I 13 am beginning to be more persuaded of, that I ought to 14 make that judgment, that at a minimum there is a fair 15 issue for the trier on that question.

16 There is certainly so clearly a valid
17 entry that I ought not to let a trier even consider 18 it.

19 MR. FRECHETTE: Nothing changed since yes-
20 terday, your Honor.

21 THE COURT: The facts haven't, but the 22 appropriate standard has in my mind.

23 MR. FRECHETTE: There is nothing that has 24 come into evidence today --

25 THE COURT: I understand that.

2 MR. FRECHETTE: That has anything to do
3 with the situation that we discussed yesterday.

4 THE COURT: I quite agree with you.
5 The facts on that have not changed at all but my view
6 of the standards have changed. I think I was wrong 7 yesterday in determining the standard. Now, whether 8 that changes the result is not automatic, but I do 9 think that the issue is one for the trier and not to 10 me. After all, in Bivens the court says the officers 11 have a defense if they plead, which was Mr. Williams' 12 point -- he wants -- if they plead and prove probable 13 cause and good faith, well, I have to believe that when 14 the court said prove it, they then prove it to the 15 satisfaction of the trier.

16 MR. FRECHETTE: I submit for your Honor's 17 consideration that there is no evidence from which 18 reasonable men could differ and, therefore, it's not 19 an issue for the fact but for the -- but for the Court.
20 Nothing has changed on that point.

21 THE COURT: I agree with you that the 22 facts haven't but if the test is whether they have 23 reasonable grounds not merely to arrest but reasonable 24 grounds to go into the dwelling to arrest and to do 25 it at night, that standard is not a clear -- is not

2 clear on these facts.

3 MR. FRECHETTE: Let me suggest --

4 THE COURT: It is at a minimum, if I
5 had to rule on it, I might well rule there wasn't 6 probable cause but at a minimum it's sufficiently within 7 the gray, that I can't say it would be unreasonable if 8 the jury thought it was unreasonable.

9 MR. FRECHETTE: Might I suggest, your 10 Honor, and I really don't care which way you go on it, 11 but I say that on the evidence, reasonable men cannot 12 differ on it. It has to be made by the Court.

13 THE COURT: No, I think there is a
14 ground -- I don't think a jury would be acting 15 unreasonable if they thought that both the decision to 16 enter and the manner of entry was not support by a 17 reasonable belief in its validity.

18 MR. FRECHETTE: I don't want to --

19 THE COURT: As I say it is a very 20 conceptual matter for them to have to deal with, but 21 I think if I'm to follow Bivens case I have to give 22 them that standard. I can't just tell it to myself and 23 give them some general instruction as to who did they 24 think should win. It is going to be complicated but I
25 think I have to do it that way.

2 MR. EASTMAN: As I understand -- part
3 of the motion for directed verdict -- as I understand
4 Mr. Williams, he is not claiming the wages were lost 5 but that it was simply a manifestation of her nervous-
6 ness, and following that I have heard no other evidence 7 as to possible damages and I would think that any 8 charge to them on the particular damages would be a 9 matter of conjecture and surmise.

10 I don't see what measure they could 11 possible use.

12 THE COURT: There is always a bit of 13 surmise when you're trying to assess a constitutional 14 court but that has not dissuaded any court from permitting
15 a trier to consider it and bring in some realistic
16 number. Now, like any damage assessment, it is possible 17 that the number would be just not within any fair 18 limits --

19 MR. EASTMAN: What I am basically saying
20 to the Court is this, without the measure of damages,
21 and I take it they would be in your mind compensatory 22 damages, they have no basis upon which to judge for 23 any compensatory damages and following that, under the--

24 THE COURT: You are quite right, they 25 don't have the normal standards that arrive in common

2 law torts where you talk about not only physical injury 3 but pain and suffering and things like that, but 4 constitutional torts, invasion of privacy is com-5 pensatable.

6 Now, you are quite right in saying it's 7 really a matter of conjecture how you put a value on 8 it, but the cases, as I understand them, have said that 9 it is perfectly all right for a trier, in this case a 10 jury, within some outer limits, of course, to make 11 their individual assessment of what the value to a 12 citizen is of having his privacy unconstitutionally 13 invaded.

14 They don't have ready bench marks, that's 15 true, but it is an area where they are entitled to 16 apply their judgment.

17 MR. EASTMAN: Following that, as I
18 understand the complaint, there is a claim for puni-
19 tive damages. Now, my understanding in Connecticut 20 law of damage, on punitive damages there are two types: 21 one granted by the statute and more specifically in 22 the section on motor vehicle violations, which are a 23 subject of the court assessment, and that's not the 24 case in this particular -- the other situation is 25 exemplary damages, so-called, and in Connecticut

2 probably the only state in all 50 that has it this way.
3 Usually if one dollar of compensatory damages, as I 4 understand it, in the other states then it can be any 5 number of dollars in punitive damages, however, in the 6 State of Connecticut as far as the exemplary damages 7 and sometimes called punitive damages, the measure of 8 damages are the costs to the individual and, in other 9 words, there should have been some testimony placed in 10 the evidence bearing upon that particular factor and 11 it's usually something in the vicinity of court costs
12 and attorney's fees and I've heard no testimony.

13 I do not think it would be proper for the 14 Court to charge on exemplary damages.

15 THE COURT: You mean because of the 16 Connecticut rule?

17 MR. EASTMAN: Yes, sir.

18 THE COURT: There are, of course, a 19 number of cases where punitive damages in a civil 20 rights action have been allowed either where there is 21 proof of malice, and I wouldn't submit that theory to 22 this jury because I don't think there is any evidence 23 to support malice, but the other theory is where the 24 action taken by the officers is such that the trier 25 feels some deterrent aspect ought to be expressed, and

1 not depends on your own sound judgment.

2 the cases that have done that seem to me not to view 3 it as a matter of the state law of damages but rather 4 as a matter of the federal law of 1983.

5 MR. EASTMAN: I am not prepared -- I
6 was just surmising myself after Mr. Williams indicated 7 that he was not pressing the wage claim situation.

8 MR. FRECHETTE: I forgot to tell your 9 Honor one thing, if I might, and it goes back to the 10 case you gave us yesterday. Mr. Williams said in 11 support of what your Honor is doing, there is always 12 the threat of escape as there was in that case. The 13 threat of escape is present in this case.

14 THE COURT: I understand that. Clearly 15 there is a circumstance that has a bearing here, the 16 circumstance being the information that the Jones 17 boys were going to leave early in the morning.

18 MR. FRECHETTE: I can't distinguish those 19 two cases, that's what bothers me. I cannot distinguish 20 -- I can't read that case and see where it makes a 21 particle of difference to this case.

22 THE COURT: You see, even if they were 23 identical I think I would have to give it to the jury 24 because I don't think even Judge Leventhal in the 25 Dorman case would have said that not only does he think

2 there is probable cause in Dorman but would he think
3 that it would be unreasonable for a trier to come out
4 differently. That is a close case. The whole opinion
5 I think fairly evidences that it was a troublesome 6 issue.

7 MR. FRECHETTE: Bartlett is a summary
8 judgment case. I really --

9 THE COURT: I'm sure that is the same 10 as our situation.

11 MR. FRECHETTE: I think that case also-- 12 I will grant you, you don't have the entry but every-13 thing is right with it, it's really --

14 THE COURT: This case is essentially--

15 MR. FRECHETTE: Then I say to you that 16 the Dorman case is on all fours with us.

17 THE COURT: You see, it's no different
18 than if Dorman had been a civil rights case and it 19 went to the jury and the defendants had won. The fact 20 that they won would not mean this jury could consider 21 identical facts. Triers are entitle to come out 22 differently on facts that are fairly within an area 23 where the reasonable could go either way.

24 MR. FRECHETTE: I understand that.

25 THE COURT: Even if it were identical

2 I don't mean to suggest that the plaintiff may win just because

2 this case would go to the jury.

3 MR. FRECHETTE: Fair enough. Thank you,
4 your Honor.

5 THE COURT: I hope that I have conveyed
6 to you essentially the standard I will use to the jury 7 so that your arguments can be guided.

8 In summary, it will be if there is no
9 probable cause that is a complete defense. If there 10 was not probable cause they still have a defense if 11 they acted with the subjective good faith that in their 12 own minds they were in good faith, and if objectively 13 they had a belief in the validity of what they were 14 doing, that is to say, the lawfulness of what they were 15 doing, and if that belief objectively was a reasonable 16 one, I plan to view it though in three distinct elements.

17 As to the right to arrest, as to the right
18 to enter and as to the manner of entry.

19 MR. WILLIAMS: For the record, I would 20 like to say that to the extent which your Honor's 21 decision does not follow the Joseph versus Rowlen case, 22 I would object to the --

23 THE COURT: There is no question I am 24 not following that case. I think it takes a view of 25 Pierson which the Bivens court in this Circuit does not

2 with the right that the plaintiff alleges has been denied her.

2 share and I feel obliged to follow the Bivens language.

3 MR. WILLIAMS: Before you recess, if I
4 could ask a procedural question, is it my understanding 5 that the procedure this afternoon will be the complainant 6 will open and close and both defense counsel will be 7 concluded.

8 THE COURT: Yes. There is one thing
9 I did not take up with you is who has the burden of 10 proof. Again, Bivens seems to suggest that these are 11 defenses on which the defendants would have the burden 12 of proof. Frankly, I don't quite understand how 13 a plaintiff is relieved of the burden of showing that 14 the tort has been committed because the nature of the 15 cause of action is denial of a civil right and the 16 civil right has not been denied unless there was an 17 entry without probable cause, so I must admit I'm just 18 at a loss to understand how Bivens wants the issue put 19 to the jury with respect to the burden of proof.

20 MR. WILLIAMS: I think, if your Honor
21 please, that our burden is to show a warrantless entry 22 because the law under the Fourth Amendment is clear --

23 THE COURT: That may be the ration-
24 alizing fact that Bivens just didn't spell out. There 25 is a lot of law that in the normal situation, if there

2 is a warrant the defendant has to do a lot of shouldering
3 the load. If there is no warrant then this state does, 4 and it may be that same principle ought to apply here,
5 so I think I will place the burden by a preponderance 6 of the evidence on the defendant to establish probable 7 cause or the lesser standard of good faith and a 8 reasonable belief in the lawfulness in what they did.

9 MR. FRECHETTE: Your Honor, of course, it 10 would be my claim that he has pleaded it and he has to 11 prove it. He has pleaded unlawful actions --

12 THE COURT: I understand that but he 13 has shown an invasion of his privacy -- her privacy 14 in this case, on a warrantless entry.

15 MR. FRECHETTE: He alleged it -- all he 16 has alleged is unlawful entry by my people.

17 THE COURT: I understand that but once
18 he has shown the entry and shown the lack of a warrant, 19 then it becomes a matter of defense as to whether the 20 entry can be justified.

21 MR. FRECHETTE: We don't take exception 22 but that's not what we would agree is the law that 23 should apply. I think he has accused us of violating 24 42-1983. He has to prove it.

25 THE COURT: I don't think we are in any

2 agreement on that. The question is what are the 3 elements of that violation. His view is they are 4 satisfied when the entry is shown and it is shown to 5 be warrantless.

6 MR. FRECHETTE: Except he put the witnesses
7 on and he proved how they went in.

8 THE COURT: I don't think that the 9 burden of proof shifts depending on how much evidence 10 you put in.

11 MR. FRECHETTE: I think it might well. I
12 think it's a different thing, for example, in a State 13 Court and warrantless arrest you put the clerk on and 14 ask if there is a warrant in the file, and we rest.
15 It didn't happen here. If in a State Court I put 16 detectives on I have the problem then.

17 THE COURT: I wouldn't have thought
18 so. As the trial in the probable cause situation I 19 certainly wouldn't shift the burden of proof depending 20 on who went first with the evidence. That is just a 21 matter of order of proof and doesn't affect --

22 MR. EASTMAN: I join with Mr. Frechette.

23 THE COURT: All right, recess until 24 2.

25 (A recess for lunch was taken.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

THE COURT: Let me make a slight modification to what I told you before. In the interest of trying to somewhat simplify this for this jury, the concepts are going to be confusing enough, and I have suggested that there were really three aspects of what they were focusing on: probable cause to arrest, the reasonableness of the decision to enter and the manner of the entry.

It seems to me that there really isn't a dispute on this record as to probable cause to make the arrest, but the issues really turn on probable cause to enter the McEachern home to look to arrest the Jones, and the second question of the reasonableness of the manner by which that entry was affected.

So I will focus their attention hopefully on those two aspects of the incident, as to each to ask them to go through the rather elaborate process of determining first whether what occurred was reasonable in the constitutional sense.

If they find it was, then there is no denial of a right. If they find it was unreasonable, an unreasonable decision to enter or an unreasonable manner of entry, then they take up the question of

2 defense and they consider whether the officer had good 3 faith in believing that it was lawful and whether he 4 had -- and whether his belief that it was lawful was 5 a reasonable belief.

6 Are we clear?

7 MR. WILLIAMS: Yes.

8 THE COURT: We have a copy of a verdict
9 form which you should perhaps look at.

10 MR. FRECHETTE: I don't think this is a 11 punitive damage case.

12 THE COURT: It is a close one as to 13 whether it's in the case. There certainly is no malice--

14 MR. FRECHETTE: I cannot see this as a 15 punitive damage case and I would object to the jury 16 form on that ground. I do fairly want you alerted to 17 my position, that's all I am saying.

18 MR. EASTMAN: I would object for the same 19 reason.

20 THE COURT: Well, I will submit it to 21 them only on the theory of the deterrence, not malice-- 22 I will submit punitive damage to them only on the 23 theory of the deterrence and not on the basis of 24 malice. I don't think there is any evidence of malice.

25 MR. WILLIAMS: I think that under the

2 Stolberg case, even if there is not malice the jury 3 would be entitled to return punitive damages if they 4 found that the acts were in gross disregard of con-5 stitutional rights or in reckless disregard of whether 6 or not they were violating constitutional rights.

7 THE COURT: I will give it to them under 8 a theory that if they think there is a violation, 9 whether it's sufficiently serious that punitive damages 10 are needed to be a deterrent to others. I think that 11 is the most that this set of facts would call for and 12 I agree with Mr. Frechette, it is a close question
13 but I think there are sufficient -- there is suf-14 ficient authority that a punitive damage award is 15 permissible even if only as a deterrent effect.

16 I think the reason is because it is ap-
17 propriate in civil rights cases to award no com-18 pensatory damages and then add on something by way of 19 punitive, so it is not the normal tort situation where 20 you have already given several thousands of dollars 21 by way of compensation and then ought to be rather 22 limited in inviting extra dollars by way of punishment, 23 but it is a close question I grant you.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT

ANDREW CONSIGLIO, An Officer in the New Haven Police Department, and CURTIS WILLOUGHBY, An Officer in the New Haven Police Department, Individually and in their official capacities,

Civil No. 14908

May 16, 1974
New Haven, Connecticut

B e f o r e :

JON. O. NEWMAN, U.S.D.J.

A p p e a r a n c e s :

For the Plaintiff:

JOHN R. WILLIAMS, Esq.
265 Church Street
New Haven, Connecticut

For the Defendants:

ROGER FRECHETTE, Esq.
Corporation Counsel, New Haven
215 Church Street
New Haven, Connecticut

GEORGE EASTMAN, Esq.
265 Church Street
New Haven, Connecticut

1 THE COURT: You have heard the evidence and you have 2 heard the arguments. Now it is my duty to tell you the rules of 3 law that you are to apply in deciding this case. The facts of the 4 case will be determined by you.

5 You have heard the evidence and if there are any 6 conflicts in the evidence, you resolve them and you decide what 7 you believe happened on the night and early morning hours in 8 question. Once you have determined those facts, apply to them
9 the legal rules that I am going to endeavor to explain to you 10 now.

11 Now, in determining facts, you can draw such natural 12 and logical inferences as you think are justified, but don't go 13 outside the evidence, don't resort to guesswork or conjecture.

14 Now, in considering evidence in any case there are two 15 types of evidence that you can consider. One is direct evidence 16 - such as testimony of an eyewitness, what a person saw, what 17 a person heard. The other is indirect or circumstantial 18 evidence: that is, inferences which may be drawn with 19 reasonable certainty from facts.

20 The law makes no distinction between direct and 21 circumstantial evidence, but simply requires that the jury find 22 the facts in accordance with the preponderance of the evidence.
23 Each type of evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, should 24 be treated equally.

25 Now, in this civil action, I will have occasion to refer to burden of proof. Burden of proof is sustained on the different issues I will mention to you, when that issue is proven by what we call a preponderance of the evidence. Now, that is different than it would be in a criminal case, because this is a civil case and not a criminal case.

In a criminal case, you have probably heard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, but in a civil case, the standard is proof by a preponderance of evidence.

That means simply to prove that something is more likely so than not so. Preponderance of the evidence means such evidence as, when considered and compared with that opposed to it, has more convincing force and produces in your minds a belief that what is sought to be proved is more likely true than not. It doesn't turn on the number of witness, but it means that the evidence on behalf of the party who has the burden of proof must be greater in weight in your judgment than the evidence opposing it.

If you like, visualize it as a pair of scales. If the scales are absolutely even, then the party who has the burden of proof hasn't sustained it. If the scales tip a little bit in that person's favor, then that person has sustained the burden of proof, but it's a matter of the weight and quality of evidence, not the quantity.

Now, in deciding the facts of this case, you are going to have to determine the credibility, the believability of the

1 witnesses who testify. In doing that, you will use the tests
2 you would ordinarily use in determining the truth of matters
3 important to you in your everyday life. Consider the demeanor
4 of the witness on the stand; any interests that he or she may 5 have had in the outcome of the case; and any bias, prejudice, 6 either for or against either party; the opportunity of the 7 witness to observe; their reason to remember; the inherent 8 probability of their story; its consistency or lack of 9 consistency; and its corroboration or lack of corroboration 10 with other evidence in the case.

11 You should scrutinize all the testimony given, consider 12 each witness' intelligence, motive, state of mind, and manner on 13 the stand.

14 You should also bear in mind that if you find that a 15 witness has testified falsely on any material point: that is, 16 any really important point, then you may take that into 17 consideration in determining whether he or she has testified
18 falsely on other points. Simply because you find a witness 19 has not testified with respect to one fact accurately doesn't 20 necessarily mean that he or she is wrong on every other point.
21 A witness may be honestly mistaken on one point and be entirely 22 accurate on others. But if you find that a find that a witness 23 has deliberately lied on a material point, it is only natural 24 that you should be suspicious of that person's testimony on 25 other points. Under those circumstances, you are entitled to

2 THE COURT: I raise it because while Courts of Appeals
1 disbelieve the testimony entirely. Whether you believe it or 2 not depends on your own sound judgment.

3 It is also relevant in considering credibility to 4 consider the fact that a witness has been convicted of a felony
5 on one or more occasions. The fact of prior convictions does 6 not, of course, mean that a witness is not to be believed, but 7 it is one circumstance to consider in weighing the credibility
8 of the witness. And as I mentioned to you earlier in the trial, 9 that's the only purpose that a prior conviction can be considered 10 by you, and that is to be considered along with everything else 11 in determining the credibility of that witness' testimony and for 12 no other purpose.

13 Now, in this suit, plaintiff, Mrs. McEachern, has 14 brought a civil suit against Mr. Consiglio and Mr. Willoughby.
15 They are two separate defendants, and you are to consider each 16 separately. Whether you find for or against one doesn't 17 necessarily determine whether you find for or against the other.
18 They are each entitled to have their liability determined 19 separately.

20 This case is brought in the Federal Court because the 21 plaintiff alleges that the defendants have denied her a right 22 secured by the Constitution of the United States. The suit is 23 brought here under a section of federal law which reads as 24 follows -- it's very short -- "Every person who, under color of 25 any statute . . . of any State . . . subjects or causes to be

1 subjected any citizen of the United States to the deprivation 2 of any rights, privileges or immunities secured by the 3 Constitution shall be liable to the party injured. . . ."

4 So what you will have to determine in this case are 5 the following: Did the defendants act under what we call 6 color of law -- I will explain that in a minute -- did the 7 defendants deny the plaintiff a right secured by the 8 Constitution; do they have a defense against liability; and 9 if all three of those questions are answered in favor of the 10 plaintiff, what damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to.

11 Now, the first question is fairly easy. Acting under 12 color of law simply means acting in ones capacity as a police 13 officer, as far as this case is concerned, and there really 14 isn't any dispute, really, that at the time of the incident, 15 both defendants were police officers of the City of New Haven
16 and were acting in their official capacities.

17 The difficult questions in this case arise when you 18 come to consider whether the plaintiff was denied a right 19 secured by the Constitution and whether the officers have a 20 defense to the plaintiff's claim.

21 Your task in deciding those questions is not an 22 easy one. You have to be concerned with competing interests, 23 both of which are very important. On the one hand, there is the 24 interest of a citizen to enjoy her Constitutional right to be 25 secure in her home. On the other hand, there is the interest

1 the interest of police officers in performing their duties.
2 I don't mean to suggest that the plaintiff may win just because 3 the privacy of her home was invaded. Nor do I mean to suggest 4 that the police officers may win just because they were on duty.
5 The standards you have to apply are rather subtle, because the 6 law tries to accommodate the competing interests of both the 7 citizen and the police officers.

8 Unfortunately, the standards are also rather 9 complicated. Let me first set them out in summary form, and then 10 go back over them in some detail.

11 The plaintiff has a constitutional right to be secure 12 in her home against unreasonable searches. So if there was an 13 unreasonable search of her home, she was denied a right secured 14 by the Constitution. Even if she was denied such a right, the 15 officers have a complete defense to this suit if they in good 16 faith believed that what they were doing was lawful and -- 17 this is a dual requirement -- and if they believe in the lawful-18 ness of what they were doing was a reasonable belief.

19 Now, in determining whether a constitutional right was 20 denied and if so, whether the officers have a defense to such 21 action, you must focus on two separate aspects of this episode.
22 The first concerns the decision by the officers to enter the 23 plaintiff's apartment, and the second concerns the manner in 24 which they entered her apartment, and those are two separate 25 aspects, and you are to consider them separately.

50

1 Let me go into this in some detail. Let me start
2 with the right that the plaintiff alleges has been denied her.
3 She sues for violation of a right protected by the Fourth 4 Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Here is what 5 that amendment says, very short statement: "The right of the 6 people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and 7 effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be 8 violated." Then it goes on to talk about warrants being issued 9 only on probable cause. As you can see, what the Constitution 10 protects against is "unreasonable searches," and it also 11 contemplates that generally there will be warrants. In this 12 case, the evidence is undisputed that the officers went into 13 the plaintiff's apartment in an attempt to arrest the Jones
14 brothers. It is also undisputed that they didn't have a warrant.

15 Whether the plaintiff's constitutional right was 16 violated depends upon whether the decision to enter her house to 17 make that arrest of the Jones brothers without a warrant was a 18 reasonable decision under all the circumstances.

19 In this case, there really isn't any dispute that the 20 officers had a reasonable basis for wanting to arrest the Jones 21 brothers. In other words, if they saw them on the street, the 22 Jones brothers, they would have had a right to arrest them.
23 The question, the first question for you is whether the defendants 24 denied this plaintiff, Mrs. McEachern, her constitutional right to 25 privacy when they went into her apartment in an effort to find

1 the Jones brothers and arrest them.

2 This entry was a search, it was a search for the 3 Jones brothers. Generally, a search is not valid under the 4 Fourth Amendment if made without a search warrant. Let me
5 explain why a warrant is generally required. Police officers 6 all the time have situations where they think they either 7 ought to arrest or ought to make a search. By requiring a warrant, 8 the law requires the police officer to go before some neutral 9 person, maybe a judge of this court, or it may be a magistrate, 10 or some other proper official, but some person other than the 11 police themselves, and tell that neutral person why it is they 12 want to arrest someone or search some place, and then if they 13 persuade that person that, indeed, they have a sufficient reason, 14 a warrant is issued, but the warrant requirement makes sure that 15 the officer doesn't get to do this on his own, so to speak, 16 and the Constitution has a warrant provision, because it was 17 deemed important, as a general rule, to have warrants, to be 18 sure police officers did secure prior approval before they 19 arrested people or searched them, so warrants are important 20 and are generally required, but in some limited circumstances a 21 search is reasonable within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment, 22 even if made without a warrant. But bear in mind that searches 23 without warrants are the exception and can only be justified by 24 special circumstances, what the law sometimes calls exigent
25 circumstances, circumstances that make it reasonable to act

1 promptly to enter a home to make an arrest and to make that entry 2 without a warrant.

3 Now, several factors bear on the reasonableness of 4 such an entry into a home without a warrant. They are, in this 5 case, whether the officers had a sufficient basis for believing
6 that the Jones brothers were then at 671 Winchester Street, 7 plaintiff McEachern's apartment; whether there was time to get 8 a search warrant; whether taking the time to get a warrant 9 created an unacceptable risk that the Jones brothers might leave 10 and take the heroin with them; whether it was reasonable to 11 station one officer at the apartment while the other went to get 12 a warrant; whether the crime the officers believed the Jones 13 brothers had committed was serious enough to justify prompt 14 action to find and arrest them; and whether the time of night
15 was such that special care should be taken to be sure the officers 16 had the right apartment before entering. In short, all of the 17 circumstances that you find to have existed at the time the 18 officers decided to enter the apartment may be considered in 19 deciding whether that decision to enter without a warrant was 20 a reasonable one. If you conclude it was reasonable to enter 21 the apartment without a warrant, then there was no violation of 22 plaintiff's constitutional right; but if you find that it was 23 unreasonable to enter without a search warrant, then her 24 constitutional right was violated. And since the officers had 25 no warrant, they gave the burden of proof to persuade you by a

1 preponderance of the evidence that the decision to enter was 2 reasonable.

3 Now, if you find the search was reasonable, even 4 though without a warrant, then that's the end of the case as far 5 as the decision to enter is concerned. And the defendants would 6 not be liable for the entry. But if you find that the entry 7 without warrant was unreasonable, then you have to consider 8 whether the officers have a defense.

9 As I mentioned, they have a defense if two things are 10 so. If they believed in good faith that their conduct was lawful, 11 and if that belief in the validity of their entry, if they had 12 such a belief, was a reasonable belief. The first question, 13 the good faith part of that is subjective as to either officer 14 you are considering at the time. The question is: did he believe 15 in his own mind that his conduct was lawful? The second part 16 of the defense test is subjective -- excuse me -- is objective.
17 Let me go over that again. The first part is subjective; it 18 is whether the officer in his own mind had a good faith belief in 19 the reasonableness of what he was going; but the second question 20 is objective, it's if he believed his conduct was lawful, was 21 this a reasonable belief under all the circumstances? That is, 22 was it a reasonable belief in the validity of the search to find 23 the persons to be arrested?

24 Now, the burden is on the officers to prove by a
25 preponderance of the evidence that they had a good faith belief

1 and that such a belief was a reasonable belief.

2 So if the entry without warrant was reasonable, there 3 was no violation of constitutional right. If the entry without 4 warrant was unreasonable in view of all the circumstances, then 5 you have to decide whether or not the officers have a defense, 6 and they would have a defense only if they had a good faith
7 belief that what they were doing was lawful, and if that belief
8 was reasonable.

9 I know it's a bit confusing because the word
10 "reasonable" comes up in different contexts. When you are trying 11 to determine whether the plaintiff's right was violated, you have 12 to determine the reasonableness of a warrantless entry at night-13 time. Then if you find that the search was unreasonable, 14 according to the Constitution, then you have to consider whether 15 it was reasonable for the officers to believe that the search
16 was reasonable.

17 So far, I have been concerned only with the decision
18 to enter the apartment. After you have considered the issues 19 that relate to the decision to enter, then you have to go through 20 the same analysis with respect to the manner of entry. This is 21 a separate part of the case. Here, again, you start by consider-22 ing whether the manner of entry was reasonable or unreasonable
23 under all the circumstances. Forced entry by police officers 24 into a private dwelling is generally unreasonable if it's not 25 preceded by an announcement of their authority and an appropriate

1 interval of time to permit the resident to come to the door and 2 open it. As you can appreciate, that's an important requirement.

3 How much time is appropriate varies with the 4 circumstances. Certainly, the fact that this entry occurred at 5 night is one factor that bears heavily on the time that would be 6 appropriate for a person to come to the door. On the other hand, 7 the information that the officers had about the people they 8 thought were inside is also relevant for you to consider.

9 In this case, the evidence is in dispute as to just 10 what happened as the officers made their entry. You have to 11 resolve the factual disputes and make your own conclusion as 12 to what you believe the facts are.

13 Now, again, since the entry was made without a warrant, 14 the burden of proof is on the officers to show by a preponderance 15 of the evidence that the method of entry was reasonable. If you 16 find it was reasonable, then the officers have no liability 17 because of the manner of entry; but if you find, either because 18 they didn't give notice of their authority, or because they didn't 19 give it clearly enough, or because they didn't wait long enough 20 for someone to respond, if you find for those reasons that the 21 manner of entry was unreasonable, then you have to consider, just 22 as you did with the decision to enter, whether the officers have 23 a defense.

24 In other words, you will have to decide whether the 25 officers in good faith believed the manner of their entry was

1 lawful and if they believed that, whether it was reasonable for 2 them to believe in the validity of their entry. Here, again, 3 the officers have the burden of proof to establish by a
4 preponderance of the evidence that they had a good faith belief
5 in the lawfulness of the manner of entry, and that such a belief 6 was a reasonable one for them to have.

7 Let me try to recapitulate that. Consider separately 8 the officers' decision to enter without warrant and the manner of 9 their entry. As to each aspect, first consider whether under 10 all the circumstances the decision to enter or the manner of 11 entry was reasonable, was consistent with the constitutional 12 standards I have tried to explain.

13 If you find that either the decision to enter or the 14 manner of entry was not consistent with constitutional standards, 15 then consider whether the officers had a good faith belief in 16 the lawfulness of the decision to enter, or the manner of 17 entry, and whether that belief was a reasonable one. And I think 18 I pointed out the defense aspect is a dual requirement. The 19 defense is established only if they had both a good faith belief 20 in the lawfulness of what they were doing, and if that belief was 21 a reasonable one.

22 If you find with respect to either the decision to enter 23 or the manner of entry that the plaintiff was denied a 24 constitutional right, and that one or both of the officers 25 do not have a defense to such action, then you should consider

1 what damages, if any, to award.

2 There are two kinds of damages that you may consider.
3 The first is for ordinary damages, damages that compensate the 4 plaintiff for the denial of her constitutional right, if you
5 find there was such a denial. It is difficult to place a dollar 6 value on the denial of a constitutional right. You simply have 7 to make your own judgment as citizens as to the cost of having 8 one's constitutional right to privacy impaired by what occurred 9 in this case. You can consider the plaintiff's reaction to what 10 occurred in making this determination, the extent to which she 11 was distressed and upset. Whether or not you determine she is 12 entitled to damages by way of compensation, you may also decide 13 whether she should be awarded any punitive damages. In a case 14 like this, you may consider whether the denial of a 15 constitutional right, if you find that occurred, was so serious 16 that those liable should pay a penalty so that in the future 17 others will be deterred from engaging in the same conduct.
18 Whether you decide to award any punitive damages is entirely 19 within your discretion.

20 Now, as I have indicated, these are subtle questions, 21 and the relationship between the issues is a bit complicated.
22 I have tried to set them out perhaps overly methodically, but I 23 think it's important for you to go through it step by step and 24 focus on each aspect of the episode, the decision to enter, and 25 then the manner of entry, and ask yourselves: was there a denial

1 of constitutional right, and if there was, is there a valid 2 defense; and that defense, if you find it to be so, would be 3 established only if the officers had a good faith belief in the 4 lawfulness of what they were doing and that belief strikes you as 5 being a reasonable one. And as I have acknowledged, those are 6 not easy questions because they are important values that weigh 7 on both sides, and you have to very conscientiously apply those 8 standards to these facts in making your judgments.

9 Well, now, when you get to the jury room, you will 10 have the exhibits with you. Determine the facts solely on the 11 basis of the evidence, and then apply the principles of law that 12 I have outlined to you, and render your verdicts fairly, 13 uprightly, and without a scintilla of prejudice.

14 When you reach a verdict, your verdicts in this case,
15 and as I indicated, you must reach separate verdicts because there 16 are two defendants, each verdict must be unanimous. All of the 17 six jurors who will be in the room must agree before there can 18 be a verdict, but it's the duty of each juror to discuss and 19 consider the opinions of the other jurors, but in the last analysis, 20 it's your individual duty as a jury to make up your own mind 21 and decide this case upon the basis of your own individual 22 judgment and conscience.

23 When you get to the jury room, select one of your 24 number as foreman or forelady and start your deliberation, 25 and when you have reached verdicts, inform us through the bailiff

1 and then return to the courtroom.

2 You will have with you a form of jury verdict by which 3 you can simply check in the appropriate blanks the decision 4 that you have made.

5 As you will see, you will have this with you, of 6 course, but as to each of the named defendants, in effect, you 7 have three options. You can find a defendant liable to the 8 plaintiff for damages, liable to the plaintiff for punitive 9 damages, or not liable to the plaintiff at all, and you have those 10 same three choices with respect to the second named defendant;
11 and then if you find that one or both of the defendants is liable 12 to the plaintiff, then you have blanks to fill in what amounts 13 you determine in your discretion are appropriate for compensatory 14 damages, if any, and punitive damages, if any.

15 All right, the jury may retire. I will ask the Clerk 16 to draw one card out, and that card will be the alternate, and 17 the other six will be the jury.

18 THE CLERK: Number 13, John Elliot.

19 THE COURT: We will excuse you, Mr. Elliot. It's a 20 little frustrating to come to the end of the line and -- as 21 you can appreciate, it assures us there will be a complete jury 22 to conclude a case, we thank you for your time and attention.

23 The six members of the jury may retire.

24 (Jury excused at 4:15 p.m.)

25 MR. WILLIAMS: No exceptions or further instruction.

1 MR. FRECHETTE: I would like to keep our record straight.
2 I claim the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, as we discussed
3 before. Secondly, it's my claim that your Honor should have a 4 charge that the situation was not a search, but rather for an 5 arrest under the Tropiano rather than a search, which I think we 6 discussed this morning, as well.

7 I think punitive damages are not in this case, as I
8 discussed with your Honor before. I thought, and I may be wrong
9 in this, that your Honor had stated that you would charge as a 10 matter of law that the defendants had probable cause for the 11 arrest of the Jones brothers.

12 THE COURT: Well, I don't think I used the phrase
13 the "matter of law", but I think I said something to the effect 14 that really wasn't in dispute. I think the way I put it, they 15 did have probable cause to arrest upon. I gave them the example: 16 if they saw them on the street, they had the right to arrest them.

17 MR. FRECHETTE: I missed it, then. I apologize for 18 raising that point. Thank you very much.

19 MR. EASTMAN: I would like to join in Mr. Frechette's 20 exceptions without reiterating them.

21 THE COURT: You had previously raised the question 22 whether particularly the standard of defense should be the 23 formulation of the Bivans case or Seventh Circuit.

24 MR. WILLIAMS: I felt having noticed the Court of that 25 already, I didn't realize it would be necessary to say it again,

1 but certainly I adhere to my position.

2 THE COURT: I raise it because while Courts of Appeals
3 generally lenient in not worrying about the way exceptions are 4 noted, this is the one area where I think they are quite 5 particular when it comes to excepting a charge.

6 MR. WILLIAMS: I appreciate your bringing it to my 7 attention. I do except to that particular aspect of the charge.

8 THE COURT: The issues raised by the exceptions have 9 been gone into. They are matters of fair debate, I concede, but 10 I am satisfied that under the appropriate law in this Circuit 11 I should instruct as I have.

12 All right. Marshal will take in the exhibits and 13 we will stand in recess.

14 (Recess taken.)

15 THE COURT: Whatever the verdicts are, it was a very 16 fairly and --

17 MR. WILLIAMS: It was very fairly tried by the Court.

18 (Jury entered at 5:25 p.m.)

19 (Verdicts given.)
